Fund commentary as at end Quarter 1 2022

Short-term outlook: The US, UK and the euro area have reached their pre-pandemic level GDP. Recent economic data also points to positive, albeit slowing growth. There are several reasons underlying the slowdown. Geopolitical conflicts coming from the Russian invasion of Ukraine adds a new layer of complexity to the already elevated levels of energy prices. Higher energy prices could impact consumer demand, slowing growth. To help bring inflation down, central banks have also begun to tighten policy. This comes at a time of declining consumer sentiment and still weak real wage growth. Furthermore, China's ongoing battle against its worst covid outbreak in two-years, suggest that the risk of Covid has not gone away. New lockdowns in China will likely worsen the ongoing supply chain disruptions. Each of these presents potential to slow growth but are unlikely to cause a full collapse.

Inflation: Developed market inflation rates once again rose in the February round of readings. Annual CPI Inflation reached 6.2% in the UK, 7.9% in the US and 5.9% in the euro area. Core inflation has also risen more than two-times the central bank target in the UK and US, while it remains well above 2% in the euro area. Whilst energy prices roughly account for 10% of an advanced economies' inflation basket, it remains a key contributor to headline inflation. Heightened geopolitical conflicts in Eastern Europe means risks to upside inflation is elevated. The Bank of England governor Andrew Bailey expects that the Ukraine invasion will fuel the UK cost of living crisis, taking inflation to around 8% in Q2 this year.

Monetary Policy: The Federal Reserve raised its Fed Funds Target rate by 25bps, taking it to 0.25%-0.50%. The Fed Chair Jerome Powell vowed to increase rates more aggressively, if needed to tame inflation. Since the meeting, FOMC member Lael Brainard has raised the prospect of the balance sheet also being tapered more aggressively. The market is pricing in a 50bps rate hike at the next FOMC meeting.

The Bank of England hiked its policy rate for the third time in a row, taking it to 0.75%. Although the bank is expected to hike again at its next MPC meeting, the case for tightening beyond May is now less clear. This results from a "dovish" tone that was struck during the bank's MPC statement. The BoE acknowledged the decline in consumer confidence and the impact of further rate hikes on household finances. At a recent event, the BoE Governor Andrew Bailey mentioned that UK households faces a "historic shock to real incomes" this year. Whilst the ECB is expected to only increase rates "some time after" the end of bond buying programme, the plans to wind down stimulus was brought forward. The pre-pandemic asset purchase program, or APP, will decline from €40bn in April to €30bn in May, followed by €20bn in June.
